

Please do not consider taking any steps to weaken Wisconsin's no call list law. I used to receive 17 calls during the day from telemarketers. It disturbed the peace of staying at home, particularly when one needed to recover from illness, catch up on sleep, or concentrate on work. Even leisure time was interrupted by getting up to answer the phone, only to find that it was not a wanted call. Very quickly after the no call list law was in effect there was peace in my home. It is restful again and quiet, which is one of the biggest features of the house I selected to buy. The quiet outside is once again matched by the quiet inside when I choose to have the house quiet. The last thing I want is that when I cancel a service, such as a long distance telephone service, to have that multinational corporation's staff able to call me for 18 months, to ask me to use their service again. That may be in their economic interest, but it is against my interest, and costs me far more than any savings they may offer, when I cannot be at rest in my own home.

Thank you.
